February 22, 2012, SANTA FE —New Mexico Film Office director Nick Maniatis announced today that the independent feature, Biomass is shooting in and around Albuquerque and Santa Fe.

The production will employ at least 17 New Mexico crew members and 39 principal and background talent.

This is the first feature for Anthony Riazzi, a New Mexico transplant from Los Angeles where he supervised the Digital and Visual Effects for “X-Men: The Last Stand”, “Resident Evil: Extinction” and was the Technical Director for “The Matrix Revolutions”. Riazzi also wrote the screenplay for Biomass and will produce alongside former Disney executive, Alicia J. Keyes. Keyes will be producing under her banner, AJK Films, which just wrapped post-production on feature film “Blaze You Out”, also filmed in New Mexico.

New Mexican cast includes Juliet Lopez, Brenden Wedner, Matt Page, and Alejandro Montoya Marin. Additional cast includes; Steve Cormier, Katalina Parrish, Zach Dulin, Matt Berlin and Nomar Rizo.

Biomass tells the story of a highly secretive government research facility that suffers a containment breach of a genetically engineered new life form, the results are catastrophic.
