SANTA FE —New Mexico Film Office director Nick Maniatis announced today the TV series “72 Hours” filmed mid September thru early October in and around north central New Mexico.

“72 Hours” comes to TNT from Lighthearted Entertainment (Extreme Makeover), with Howard Schultz (The Moment of Truth) and Rob LaPlante (The Apprentice) serving as Executive Producers. Jeff Spangler serves as Co-Executive Producer. The production employed at least fifteen (15) New Mexico crew members.

“72 Hours” is an action-packed, white-knuckle competition series that drops competing teams from a helicopter into the wilderness. The competitors are then given only three days and a GPS tracking device to locate a cash prize. Along the way, they must hike across treacherous terrain and battle the elements to locate the cash before their rival teams.
